In tears, Ella took a brush and started cleaning the floor.

"When I finish my book, I will sell it and become a famous writer," she thought.

Suddenly, someone knocked on the door. It was a postman, delivering letters for Ella and her two step sisters. Ella opened the letter and she could not believe what she read.

"This is it!", thought Ella. "I will finish the school and become a famous writer". She ran to her room and started doing the test.

"Do not put effort in this Ella!" said stepmother. "Dora and Nora are the ones getting the scholarship. You are only good at cleaning the house, so better do what you are good at!", she smirked wickedly as she left the room and slammed the door.

Ella did not let anyone crush her dreams, so she did the test, folded it down and sent it back to the given address.

After a few days, a letter arrived again with Ella's name on it. Her stepmother opened it and she read that Ella is the one who got the scholarship. She hid the letter from Ella, hoping she will never find out.

Weeks passed by, until one day the head of the University came to their house. He asked for a girl named Ella, but the stepmother said she doesn't know any girl with that name and that she has only two daughters.

"None of these is Ella's writing", said the recruiter.

"There is no one else in this house?", he asked.

"daughters and I", said the stepmother pulling a sad face on.

In that moment, Ella shouted from the other room:

"The meal is ready!".

The man ran to the room and saw Ella setting the table.

He gave her a piece of paper and a pen and said:

"What is your dream, little girl? Write it here."

Ella wrote a sentence:

"I wish to get the scholarship to study at university."

The head compared Ella's writing with the handwriting on the test in his hand. It was exactly the same.

"So, you are the one the whole town is looking for!" he cried excitedly.
"Congratulations! You got the scholarship! But, you must be a good student and finish your primary and secondary school first!"

When Ella saw that her dream came true, she was the happiest girl in the world."

Ella loved studying there. She was the best student they ever had, so they decided to give her a job as well. She became the most popular writer in the town. She bought her own house with a library full of books, got a cat and lived happily ever after.

Thank you for keeping her safe!
